Wildlife conservation is the practice of protecting plant and animal species and their habitats. As part of the world's ecosystems, wildlife provides balance and stability to nature's processes. The goal of wildlife conservation is to ensure the survival of these species, and to educate people on living sustainably with other species.

The human population has grown exponentially over the past 200 years, to more than seven billion people today, and it continues to grow rapidly. This means natural resources are being consumed faster than ever by the billions of people on the planet. This growth and development also endangers the habitats and existence of various types of wildlife around the world.

National and international organizations like the World Wildlife Fund, the Wildlife Conservation Society, and the United Nations work to support global conservation efforts on many different fronts. They work with the government to establish and protect public lands, and help create legislation to protect various species. They also promote biodiversity to support the growing human population while preserving existing species and habitats.
